Each point of the star is a triangle consisting of ten holes (four holes on each side). The interior of the board is a hexagon with each side five holes long. Each triangle has a different color and there are six groups of ten pins with matching colors. Preparation of the Chinese lady can play two, three, four or six players. Obviously, for the game of six players, all pins and triangles are used. If there are four players, the game starts in two pairs of opponent triangles and two players the game should also be played from the opponent's triangles. In the game for three players pins will start in three triangles of equivalence from each other. Each player chooses a color and 10 pins of this color is placed in a suitably colored triangle. Many rules state that unused triangles must remain filled with unused pins in order to be used during the game. We recommend that the game is a little more interesting if unused triangles are left empty, so the pins can skip and come to rest in them if desired. The goal of the game is to be the first player to move all ten pins across the board and into the triangle opposite. The first player to occupy all 10 target holes is the winner. Play coin tossing decides who starts. Players take turns to move one pin of their own color. In one stroke the pin can either simply be moved into the adjacent hole, or it can make one or more hops through other pins. If it is bouncing, each jump must be above the adjacent pin and into an empty hole directly behind it. Each jump can be above any colored pin, including your own player, and can continue in any of the six directions. After each jump, the player can either finish or, if possible and desirable, continue bouncing over another pin. Occasionally, the player will be able to move the pin all the way from the starting triangle across the board and into the opposite triangle in one move! Pins are never removed from the board. However, once the pin has reached the opposite triangle, it must not be moved from the triangle - only in the triangle. Soon the question arises whether it is possible to move the pin into a triangle, which is the starting or destination triangle for another player. House rules apply, but Masters Games suggests the following: the pin can be skipped through such a triangle, but is not allowed to come to rest in this triangle. An anti-perishable debate has always arisen over a situation where a player is prevented from winning because the opponent's pin occupies one of the holes in the target triangle. Most Chinese lady rules omit mention - which means it is perfectly legal to block opponents in questionable fashion. Several anti-spoilage rules have been proposed - one of the jobs is to say that if one or more holes in the target triangle contain a pin belonging to another player, it does not prevent the player from winning. The game is simply won when all available points in the triangle are occupied. Masters Games proposes the following additional rule invented by James Masters in 2002, which is wide enough to capture all such situations: If a player is prevented from moving a pin into a hole in the target triangle because of the presence of an opponent's pin in that hole, the player has the right to swap the opponent's pin with that of his own pin. This applies to one stroke hole and any part of the bouncing stroke. Variations For a more engaging game when three players play, each player can control two sets of pins instead of one. Two players can control three sets of pins each. Each.
